A LOOK AT WHAT MIGHT HAPPEN IN NEXT WEEK'S RACES

WASHINGTON The midterm elections Tuesday are likely to put a lot more Republicans in the currently Democratic-led Congress. But it is uncertain whether Republicans will win control of the House of Representatives or Senate—or if President Obama's party will surprise the nation and hang on to both chambers. Democrats now have a 255-178 advantage in the House, with two vacancies, and they control the Senate by a 59-41 margin. All 435 House seats and 37 seats in the Senate will be up for grabs on election day. Here is a look at four possible outcomes of the congressional elections. REUTERS

SCENARIO NO. 1 Republicans win House; Democrats keep Senate

PROBABILITY: Likely

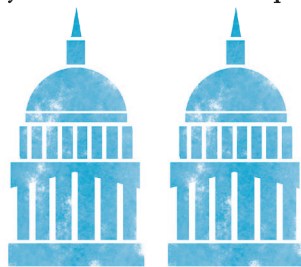

If they win a majority, House Republicans may move to quickly approve much of their conservative "Pledge to America" agenda, which has measures to repeal Obama's overhaul of the health care system, end government control of mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac and impose a federal hiring freeze.

SCENARIO NO. 2 Republicans win House and Senate

PROBABILITY: Possible, but unlikely

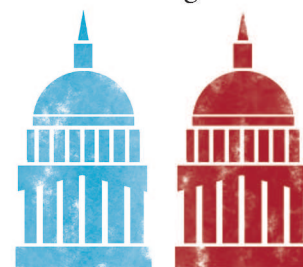

Republicans would have to pick up 10 seats—including a number of them in highly competitive races—to have the 51 votes needed to control the Senate. Obama could prevent a Republican Senate from repealing major legislative successes, including his health care overhaul and financial sector regulation.

SCENARIO NO. 3 Democrats keep control of House and Senate

PROBABILITY: Unlikely

Even if they pulled it off, they would still likely end up with smaller majorities in both chambers, making it tougher to pass any of Obama's stalled legislative efforts, including an overhaul of immigration laws and climate change regulation.

SCENARIO NO. 4 Democrats keep House; Republicans take Senate

PROBABILITY: Super unlikely

This would be a surprise, as opinion polls give Republicans a lead in the race for the House but less of an advantage in the campaign for the Senate. This scenario also could create political gridlock.

SIDE NOTE Even Stevens in the Senate?

There is a possibility the Senate could split evenly. Democrats, however, would retain control because Vice President Joe Biden, as Senate president, would break all tied votes.

We've created a monster mash

Overheard on the Purple Line:

"What are you dressing up as next week?"

"I'm thinking about Justin Bieber. How about you?"

"I was thinking about Princess Leia, but the sexy Jabba slave version."

If you think that conversation was between two nerdy teenagers, think again. It was a couple of adults in business suits.

Boy, has Halloween changed! Used to be that kids were the only ones who dressed up in costumes to hit the neighborhood for trick-or-treating, but now adult costumes have ballooned into a full-blown industry and Halloween has become a national week of partying for grown-ups. Why would we let kids have all the fun? Here is a holiday that gives us permission to get silly—and the only candy we need is for the eye.

Halloween has its roots in the Christian holiday All Saints Day, but under the watch of our generation it has evolved into the most deliciously un-saintly day of the year.

Let us count the ways:

» It is the perfect hookup night. You don't need to struggle for an opening line to strike up a conversation with a woman dressed up as Lady Gaga in a meat dress or a guy uniformed as JetBlue flight attendant Steven Slater with a emergency chute in one hand and a beer in the other.

» There is enough alcohol consumption to rival St. Patrick's Day.

» You get a free pass to dress up in anything you'd never dare to wear during your 9-to-5 job.

Congratulations, people! We are perfecting Halloween as an all-access holiday for bad behavior. As if for one day the borders of Las Vegas stretch from the Pacific to the Atlantic. The debauchery extends well beyond the parties and bars to the costumes themselves.

For men, Halloween is an opportunity to showcase our creative skills with the most politically incorrect outfits our twisted brains can conceive. Some of my Chinese-American friends are planning to dress up as Asian carp, and I guarantee this year you will catch half-naked men dressed as Somali pirates, Catholic priests and bed intruder viral star Antoine Dodson.

Women get to express their inner bad girl by adding the prefix "sexy" to anything kids would wear. Disney characters with a naughty flair are a traditional favorite, and this year some new ideas I've heard being tossed around include Hit Girl from "Kick-Ass," Katy Perry and her banned outfit from "Sesame Street" and Tea Party Republican witch wannabe Christine O'Donnell.

Perhaps the best costumes are a combination of sexy and politically incorrect. The winner of my office party contest last year went as "Reporter Erin Andrews in the shower," a cringe-inducing idea that offended many but turned on a lot more. Yikes!

This year, I'm still brainstorming a group-themed costume with my colleagues. "Mad Men"? "Avatar's" Na'vi? Trapped Chilean miners? Decisions this important never are easy.

Legislators poised to bet on gambling

Chicago Tribune

State lawmakers are quietly exploring how to push through a major gambling expansion during next month's fall session, the political safety zone that will open and shut over a few weeks following Tuesday's election.

The details are evolving, but one version would put a land-based casino in Chicago and new riverboats in Lake County, the south suburbs and downstate Danville. Horse tracks would get video gambling to create "racinos," and existing riverboats would be allowed to expand. Supporters are dangling the prospect of more than $400 million upfront and hundreds of millions of dollars more as the casinos come online for a state that can't pay its bills.

Slipping through big-ticket items during lame-duck sessions is nothing new in Illinois. In the past, lawmakers have raised their pay, legalized off-track betting and cut a deal to rebuild Soldier Field into its current saucerlike shape. Legislators who aren't returning have little to lose in casting controversial votes, creating a deal-making atmosphere inside the Capitol.

The notion of more gambling became an immediate issue in the governor's race.

"I don't think that's a good idea, the massive expansion of gambling," Democratic Gov. Quinn said after speaking at a rally headlined by former President Bill Clinton.

Even so, Democrats view Quinn as more amenable to increasing gambling than his Republican challenger, state Sen. Bill Brady of Bloomington. Last year, Quinn wasn't pleased with legalizing video poker, but signed the legislation because it helped pay for a massive statewide construction program.

Brady said he's "never been a proponent of solving the state's fiscal crisis by an expansion of gambling," and he's worried a Democrat-controlled legislature would ram it through if Quinn loses the election.

“I don't think that's a good idea, the massive expansion of gambling.”

Frustration builds

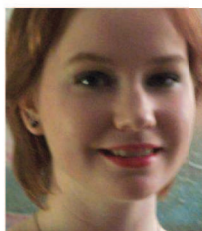

Burned remains yet to be positively identified as missing NIU student

Chicago Tribune

Hundreds of people lit candles Tuesday night to honor Northern Illinois University freshman Antinette "Toni" Keller in a somber end to a day of mounting frustration at the lack of information about her presumed death.

DeKalb police revealed Tuesday morning they had waited a week before telling the community that burned remains were found in the park Keller said she was going to Oct. 14, even though items apparently belonging to her were found nearby. Police said they wanted to be sure the remains were human before announcing the find.

Authorities also reclassified the Keller case a homicide investigation, though the remains had not been positively identified as hers.

Keller

DeKalb Police Chief Bill Feithen said he believed the slaying was an "isolated incident" but would not give any specifics. And police said they had no suspects in custody.

The turn of events left nerves frayed.

"It feels like they're keeping things from us," said freshman Andrew Buchanan, one of Keller's close friends. "We just want some closure."

"You really can't sleep because you don't know what's going on," said Ravina Ewing of Dolton, who was worried about her 22-year-old daughter's safety.

Even Keller's family has had a hard time getting answers, although the ones they do get bring them no peace.

"It's a level of violence that's hard to hear," said Mary Tarling, a cousin of Keller's and a spokeswoman for the family. "We're still carrying on and looking past all of that detail toward the answers that we seek."

Keller, an art student from Plainfield, disappeared after telling friends she was going for a walk toward Prairie Park, just south of Route 38. The park is temporarily closed.

Tarling said she is frustrated with the lack of information from police but understands it is to "protect the investigation."

"It's hard to take for us—for myself and Toni's dad," she said. "It's a cruel waiting game. We're trying to understand and be patient."

Fire at U. of C. building

Firefighters were battling an extra-alarm blaze Tuesday at a University of Chicago building that has been undergoing renovation work. Fire officials were called to the 5700 block of South University Avenue a little after 6 p.m.

West Loop bank robbed

A bank in the West Loop was robbed Tuesday, police said. A man in his 30s walked into the Charter One Bank branch at 71 S. Wacker Drive and demanded an undisclosed amount of money before fleeing.

60 reputed gang affiliates arrested

More than 60 reputed members or associates of the Black Souls, a West Side street gang, have been arrested since August as part of a new strategy by Chicago police to try to reduce gang murders and violence, police announced Tuesday.

Death probe after fatal fall

Chicago police officials have opened a death investigation after a man fell to his death from a South Loop building Tuesday afternoon. The incident happened in the 1600 block of South Michigan Avenue. Police did not release the man's name.

Clinton rallies Dems

Chicago Tribune

Former President Bill Clinton appeared Tuesday at a rally in Chicago and told Illinois Democrats they can make the difference in tight races for U.S. Senate and governor. "It depends on how badly you want this," Clinton said to cheers from those gathered at the Palmer House Hilton.

Clinton stood with Gov. Quinn and Senate candidate Alexi Giannoulias before a crowd of hundreds, saying he decided to hit the campaign trail because he realized "what a fix" the country is in with Republicans poised to make gains in Congress and statehouses around the country.

"I've seen this movie before," Clinton said, citing the 1994 midterm elections, when Democrats suffered losses while he was in the White House.

Both national Republican and Democratic organizations are spending millions of dollars on the governor and Senate race, but the GOP is being aided by GOP-leaning special interest groups, some of whom do not have to disclose who their donors are.

The public event was billed as a "Vote Illinois" rally. Volunteers with clipboards moved through the crowd trying to sign people up for voter efforts.

Spruce is loose: Chicago has its Christmas tree

Chicago Tribune

After a four-month campaign, Chicagoans have weighed in for the first time on an issue that—for the sentimental, at least—outshines who gets to be the next governor, U.S. senator or mayor: The Daley Plaza Christmas tree.

The winner, after 5,182 votes were cast, is a 70-foot blue spruce on property in McHenry County owned by the local Colomer family.

With 2,678 votes, the 80- to 90-year-old tree beat out the other candidates in a city-sponsored contest that began in July.

The second-place tree received about 1,300 votes. About 60 other entrants were shorter than the required 55 feet.

In keeping with contest rules, John Colomer nominated the tree with a story about how generations of children at Montini Catholic Middle School have watched the tree grow across from their school.

"It would be a great experience for the schoolchildren to see the removal of the tree from the site and to know its fate would be to sit in a place of prominence," Colomer wrote.

The tree will be cut down Nov. 4 and delivered to Daley Plaza the next day. Tree-lighting festivities will start at 4:30 p.m. Nov. 24. Mayor Daley and members of the Colomer family will flip a switch to light the tree at 5.

NU sends 'ghetto' costume warning

Chicago Tribune

Northwestern University is telling students to be mindful of their Halloween costumes.

In an e-mail sent to the campus late Monday, Dean of Students Burgwell Howard warned against wearing racially or culturally insensitive costumes this weekend. He also discouraged "ghetto," "pimps and hos" and "gangsta" parties at the esteemed Evanston university.

"Halloween is unfortunately a time when the normal thoughtfulness and sensitivity of most NU students can be forgotten and some poor decisions are made," Howard wrote.

The directive follows a 2009 incident in which two students attended a Halloween party in black face and pictures of their costumes appeared on Facebook.

The photos sparked outrage at the university and prompted a public forum to discuss racism on the predominately white campus.

In a similar 2007 episode, two Ph.D. students posted pictures of themselves in black face around Halloween.

"In many cases the student wearing the costume has not intended to offend, but their actions or lack of forethought have sent a far greater message than any apology could after the fact," Howard wrote.

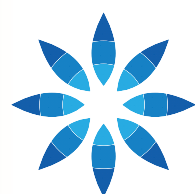

And lest there be any confusion, Howard provided students with a list of questions to ask before selecting one's Halloween attire: Is the costume based on making fun of real people or cultures? Does the costume promote cultural myths? Could someone take offense to it?

Students who answered "yes" to any of these questions were urged to rethink their choices.

Kellyn Lewis, a junior who organized the campus forum after last year's incident, said the e-mail sends an important message about the university's commitment to inclusivity.

"It shows a sense of renewed awareness of cultural and racial sensitivity," he said. "It needed to go out."

Buehrle makes pitch for pets

Chicago Tribune

In the offseason, White Sox pitcher Mark Buehrle is keeping his left arm limber by playing lots of fetch, not catch, and on Tuesday he became a starting pitchman for adopt-a-pet.com.

Buehrle and his wife, Jamie, partnered with the nonprofit group to launch a local public service billboard and TV campaign promoting the adoption of shelter pets. Also starring in the ads are the couple's three vizslas—Diesel, Drake and Duke—cavorting on the grass at U.S. Cellular Field.

The Buehrles founded Sox for Strays, a monthly pregame adoption event that brings pets from local shelters and rescue organizations to the ballpark. They also are funding a new adoption and care center for Hope Animal Rescues, an Illinois-based rescue group, and were featured in an episode of Animal Planet's "Dogs 101."

While two of their dogs were purchased seven years ago, the newest addition to the family is from a shelter, Jamie Buehrle said.

"Now [animal rescue] is a passion of mine," she said. "At the touch of a keyboard on your computer, you can find any dog you want. It's just awful how many homeless pets there are, how many dogs and cats are euthanized every year."

Animal lovers like the Buehrles are in strong demand.

"Everyone's like, 'You're insane to have three dogs and two small kids,'" Jamie Buehrle said. "Mark always says maybe when he retires, we might open a sanctuary or something."

Storm wreaks havoc— but mostly spares city

Chicago Tribune

A massive windstorm—stretching nearly 2,200 miles from north to south—plowed across the middle of the country Tuesday, downing trees and power lines across the Chicago area and spawning tornadoes in Illinois and Wisconsin.

With wind gusts in excess of 60 mph in the suburbs, more than 500 flights were canceled at O'Hare, and high winds overturned three single-engine planes at DuPage Airport in West Chicago.

"It's a huge storm, and it's dominating the wind pattern and the weather over a big chunk of North America," said WGN-TV meteorologist Tom Skilling. "And we're not done with this storm yet. The wind is going to blow for another couple days."

While reports of scattered damage and power outages came in throughout the day, it was hard for some in the city—where the weather was cloudy and blustery—to reconcile what they saw with descriptions of this being "the largest storm in decades."

By midday, some Midwesterners on Twitter, who earlier had been talking about a "Chiclone" and "Windpocalypse," dismissed the storm as a classic case of meteorological hype.

But Skilling said doubters of the storm's seriousness should hold their tongues.

"Wind damage is famously nonhomogenous, so you'll have some areas hit hard and some not," he said. "Any wind that comes into a heavily populated area encounters frictional drag from the buildings, so it may not seem as intense to people in the city. But I always hold my breath and wait to hear what comes in after these things in terms of damage."

The damage was significant in the Will County village of Peotone, where the National Weather Service confirmed that a tornado touched down and ripped the roof off a home, slightly injuring two brothers.

The tornado's path was about a mile long and 200 yards wide, according to the weather service, which listed the tornado as a category EF2, powerful enough to shift homes off their foundations, uproot trees and lift cars off the ground.

The tornado hit around 7:30 a.m. and tore the roof off a two-story home. Kathy Webb, the sister of one of the owners, said her 16-year-old nephew Jesse Schroeder was cut on his face and finger.

DEADLY VOLCANO

The Mount Merapi volcano in Indonesia erupted at least three times Tuesday, forcing thousands of residents to flee. Indonesian media reported that 15 people were killed, including some journalists who were staying in a guest house to get close to the volcano.

7 JAKARTA, Indonesia At least 112 people were killed and 502 others were missing after a 7.7-magnitude earthquake struck off Sumatra on Monday and triggered a tsunami, Indonesian officials said Tuesday. Elsewhere in the country, 15 people were suspected dead in volcanic eruptions.

The Pacific Tsunami Warning Center said the quake generated a "significant" tsunami. Some of the missing may include people who are unaccounted for after fleeing to higher ground, said Henri Dori Satoko, the head of the Mentawai Islands parliament.

Although communication with remote areas was difficult, some witnesses in West

Sumatra reported seeing a wave nearly 20 feet high. Other reports described the tsunami as being about 10 feet high.

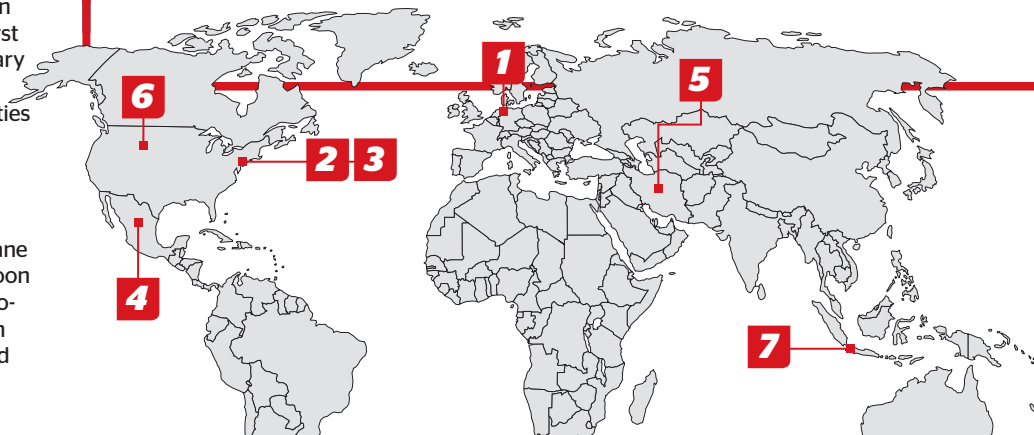

Satoko said at least one village with a population of about 200 people was swept away, with only 40 people recovered.

Nine Australians on board a tourist vessel feared missing were confirmed safe, the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade said. Those aboard the ship were not aware that an earthquake and tsunami had taken place, the department said.

Earlier, Satoko had said that "all foreign tourists are safe."

The numbers of dead and injured were in flux because information was trickling in from remote parts of Indonesia, a country made up of myriad islands.

The area believed hardest-hit was the Mentawai Islands, a popular surfing destination. In particular, Pagai Island was thought to have been affected, said Ita Balanda, a program manager for World Vision in Padang.

Bulls at Oklahoma City
7 p.m. Wednesday, WGN

Carlos Boozer

The dynamic post scorer and adept pick-and-roll player the Bulls have sought for years. And they still wait—until late November.

Bull, interrupted

Boozer may be on the sidelines, but he's still talking a big game

By Tracy Swartz

REDEYE

Forgive Carlos Boozer if he's a little short. The new, 6-foot-9 Bulls power forward is having a rough month.

When RedEye talked to Boozer in September at his Lisle basketball camp for kids, he excitedly chatted about getting to know Chicago and its fans and gelling with point guard Derrick Rose and center Joakim Noah.

He was much more glum when RedEye talked to him two weeks later before the Bulls beat Washington 107-96 in a preseason game that Boozer did not play in.

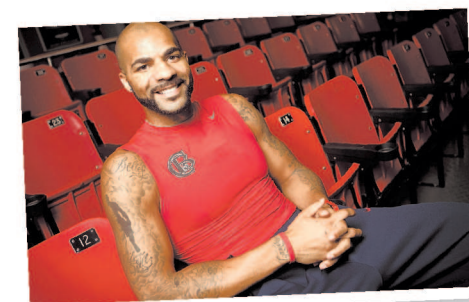

Boozer's right hand was in a cast from an injury he sustained Oct. 2. Boozer, 28, fractured his fifth metacarpal while tripping over a gym bag, he said. At the time, doctors said he could be out for eight weeks.

"I'm hoping my bone heals fast so I can get back as soon as possible," said Boozer, who said he's never had a hand injury before. "I was disappointed at first, but it's something I have to deal with. I'll get back and get ready for it."

It didn't help matters that the injury occurred amid Boozer's divorce from his wife of six years. Fans connected the two incidents, and a New York newspaper, citing unnamed sources, claimed the Bulls are investigating Boozer's injury, which they aren't, according to the Chicago Tribune.

The frenzy is uncharacteristic of Boozer, whose free agency this summer had a lot less flash than the hype surrounding the decision of his former Cleveland teammate, LeBron James. Boozer signed a five-year, $80 million contract with the Bulls in July.

Boozer is known as a consistent low-post scorer (17.2 career points per game) and rebounder (10.2 career rebounds per game). New Bulls coach Tom Thibodeau has called him unselfish and praised his versatility as a "great asset" in media reports.

"He can go away from the basket, he can go to a pick-and-roll game, he can pick and pop, he can finish with both hands, and he can also shoot," Thibodeau told reporters last month.

"I think there's a lot of different things that we can do with him, and then when you put him in a play with Derrick [Rose], it's very difficult to guard because you're going to have to commit two people to the ball. Whenever you get two people on the ball, it opens the floor up for the rest of the guys. I think it's a play in which we'll put a lot of pressure on our opponents' defense."

But how will that Rose-Boozer dynamic compare to the LeBron-Dwyane Wade-Chris Bosh trio, dubbed "Miami Thrice"? Boozer said he watched only part of James' decision TV special this summer but added that he's happy for James, whom he played with for one season with the Cavaliers seven years ago.

Boozer called the Miami group "talented" and "awesome," but he didn't seem intimidated. And he's not worried about getting in sync with the Bulls after his injury heals.

"We got great chemistry at every practice," Boozer said. "I think they'll be good, and when I come back, they'll be even better."

Boozer said the Bulls have the discipline and the stamina for full-court play and half-court play, which is the dominant style of the Eastern Conference.

"We look forward to playing against [the Heat]. We

2010-11 BULLS ROSTER

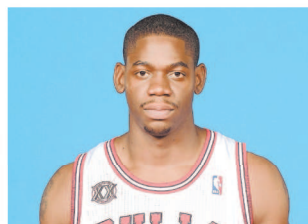

Omer Asik

A legit 7-footer who didn't mind mixing it up during preseason. Rebounds well in traffic. Must avoid foul trouble.

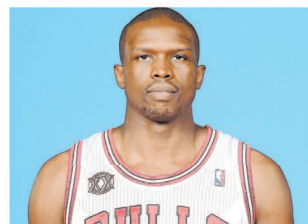

Keith Bogans

Physical defender who won't continue to shoot 50 percent from 3-point land, like in preseason. But must hit open shots.

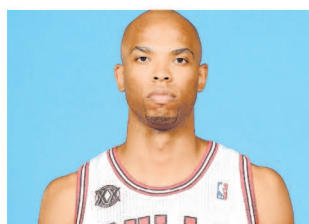

Ronnie Brewer

If balky right hamstring doesn't flare, his athleticism and defense will be welcome additions. Needs to improve shooting range.

Luol Deng

Has added a 3-point shot and is back in motion in Tom Thibodeau's offense. Underrated defender with strong team principles.

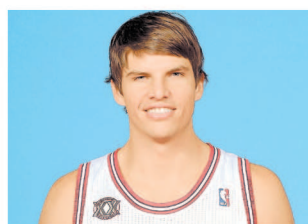

Taj Gibson

Either his plantar fasciitis isn't totally healed or some sophomore slump signs flared during preseason. Remarkably steady during rookie season.

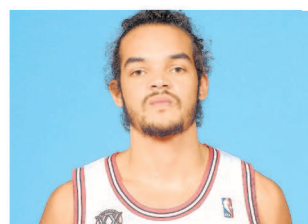

James Johnson

Exhibited better decision-making during impressive preseason that featured his lighter body. Still could be odd man out.

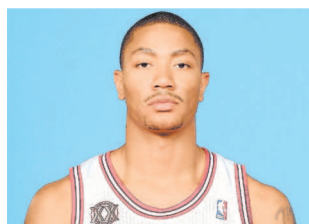

Kyle Korver

Catch. Shoot. Repeat. He wasn't signed for his defense. Don't be surprised to see this reserve finish most games.

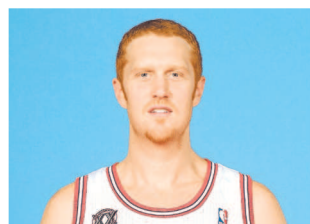

Joakim Noah

The best part about his $60 million extension? His DNA won't let him get complacent. Heart-and-soul rebounder and defender.

Derrick Rose

Will be asked to shoulder heavy scoring load during Boozer's absence. And like most challenges he's faced, he'll deliver.

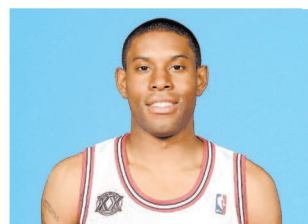

Brian Scalabrine

Solid reserve who can sit for several games and still contribute. Knows Thibodeau's systems inside and out. Great practice player.

Kurt Thomas

Ideally, this 15-year veteran will be used more at the back end of the season and in playoffs. Can still hit elbow jumper.

C.J. Watson

A shooting guard trapped in a point guard body. Must improve shot selection and demonstrate he can run team.

TRIBUNE

look forward to playing against every team that's supposed to be the best team," Boozer said.

Plus, Boozer's already part of his own trio. Shortly after he signed with Chicago, two of his Utah teammates, swingmen Ronnie Brewer and Kyle Korver, made the same move.

Korver said before he signed with the Bulls, Boozer was texting and calling him, encouraging him to "make it happen."

"We like playing with each other. It's not like we grabbed just three random dudes. We're actually, like, good playing with each other," Korver said. "We know each other's strengths, weaknesses. It's a really positive thing."

But Korver stopped short of a full endorsement when a reporter jokingly asked whether the trio got along so well they were roommates. "We all got our own spots," Korver said. "I like 'em—but not that much."

Boozer's coy about where he's living ("not in the suburbs"), but he's not shy about getting to know the city.

He said he wants to visit a few museums. He's already been to a Cubs game and plans to see many Sox, Bears and Blackhawks games. He called himself a "huge, huge Bears fan" partially because he's friends with Bears linebacker Brian Urlacher and his brother, Casey Urlacher, who used to play arena football for the Chicago Rush.

But surprisingly, Boozer's an even bigger Oprah fan.

"Big Oprah fan. I'd love to be able to take my mom to an Oprah show before she hangs it up," Boozer said, referencing Winfrey's plan to retire next year.

Perhaps Boozer, who was born in Germany, raised in Juneau, Alaska, and played for Duke, can bond with Oprah about their unique names.

When asked the worst "Boozer" joke he's ever heard, Boozer responded, "It would probably be, 'Boozer, you're a loser.' I'm like, 'Are you serious? Come up with something more original than that.'" TSWARTZ@TRIBUNE.COM

chicagonow.com/blogs

Thankfully, NBA opening day is here, Chicago, and we can all get our minds off the Morons of the Midway. The Bulls start their season filled with the kind of hope we haven't seen around here since you-know-who was tongue-wagging to a sixth title. But it's not going to be an easy road. Here are the Top Ten Teams in the East standing in our way.

Indiana Pacers

10 If it helps you relate, think of Indiana star Danny Granger as the new-school version of Reggie Miller. Only he's not a complete assclown.

Philadelphia 76ers

9 Sixers fans are terrified rookie Ohio State product Evan Turner is Eddy Curry part deux setting the franchise back a few years.

Charlotte Bobcats

8 As far as running a team goes, Michael Jordan makes Jerry Angelo and any other ignoramus up at Halas Hall look like geniuses.

Washington Wizards

7 Wizards rookie John Wall is the genuine article and already drawing comparisons to Derrick Rose. This could be the beginning of a beautiful rivalry.

New York Knicks

6 Acquiring free-agent behemoth Amare Stoudemire was nice. But if they can swing a deal for Carmelo Anthony, anything is possible.

Atlanta Hawks

5 Despite being the East's up-and-comers for years, the Hawks still don't look like legitimate playoff contenders.

Milwaukee Bucks

4 Keep an eye on Bucks star Brandon Jennings. He made it a point to try to show up Rose last season and won't back down this year either.

Orlando Magic

3 Arguably the most complete team in the East. Big man and freak-of-nature Dwight Howard will lead the Magic to another deep playoff run.

Boston Celtics

2 Don't underestimate Shaq's corpse alongside the brittle bones of Paul Pierce, Kevin Garnett and Ray Allen. They may have one more run in them.

Miami Heat

1 With LeBron James, Dwyane Wade and Chris Bosh, the Heat look damn near unstoppable. But they cannot touch the Bulls' 72-10 season.

1 The Bulls open the season Wednesday night and I am waiting for the storm. Pressure's on, Bulls.	... need therapy to deal with the Bears and Blackhawks before I can deal with the Bulls.	... am trying to decide if it's worth getting in trouble and skipping practice to watch.	... still miss Michael Jordan, Scottie Pippen and Phil Jackson.	... got a funny feeling about this year! "Funny," good. Not "I ate some old pizza. Something's feeling funny."
2 How will the Bulls do without Carlos Boozer for the next month?	Not well. He could have had a hand in a win as part of the supporting cast.	Taking their cues from other Chicago teams, they'll win two games and then fall off the cliff.	They've done pretty well so far, right? Stay healthy, stay healthy, stay healthy.	Without Boozer, the next month could be quite sobering for the Bulls.	They'll be fine. Benny will carry the load while Carlos is out ...
3 Who's the bigger Hawks stud so far: Patrick Sharp or Marian Hossa?	If by stud, you mean a male animal desirable for breeding, I'm the Marian kind.	Sharp is hotter, but Hossa has his own song. It's a draw.	Patrick Sharp. I mean he was up for Victoria's Secret Chicago's Sexiest Athlete award after all.	If I were Canadian, I'd say take off you "Hossa," Sharp is cut above the rest eh.	Both are cool dudes, but Tommy Hawk is my bud. Feathers make him a "stud."
4 Who are you pulling for in the World Series?	Can't choose between Dems and Republicans in this contest. Where's the Tea Ball Party?	I'm rooting for Josh Hamilton's muscles.	Texas Rangers. Their energy and excitement are inspiring.	I'm pulling for Tim Lincecum to get a haircut, then to "clip" the Rangers.	Not fair. Why are you asking me this?
5 What will Soxman and Southpaw be thinking during this World Series?	"I'd like to break the 'Seal.'"	Being Sox fans, I assume they'll both be watching NASCAR.	"Could I live with being a traitor?"	"Go go White Sox! 2005—let's do the time warp again!"	Seriously? Come on! Ever seen a mad mascot? Ask me about the World Series one more time ...

The Rangers' Cliff Lee

aleagueofherown

While I'd love to give an in-depth statistical analysis as to why I'm cheering for the Texas Rangers, let's be honest here. Deciding which team to cheer for when one of them is not yours largely is a knee-jerk reaction. Now that I've said that, let me say this:

San Francisco Giants. We meet again.

I suppose you think that by now I've forgotten about 1989, Will Clark, you sending Dusty Baker and his toothpicks our way, or the fact that you all turned your heads while Barry Bonds' head grew three sizes in one day. But I have not. I continue to harbor a white-hot hatred for you that invades the very fabric of my soul.

The Rangers, on the other hand, feature the remarkable Cliff Lee, Josh Hamilton's phoenix-like story of redemption and uniforms the same colors as the Cubs. If I can get past the fact that I'll be cheering for the same team as George W. Bush, there's not a single thing not to like about the Rangers.

On the other hand, what do the Giants have to offer? Rice-A-Roni? Tim Lincecum's terrible hair? Brian Wilson's inexplicable beard? No thanks. Go Rangers.

SOXMAN

As a Sox fan, there is no black-and-white answer for whom to cheer for in the World Series. Texas represents the AL, is in its first fall classic and is led by Josh Hamilton, a slugger who defines redemption. The Rangers' ascension is of biblical lore, David slaying Goliath in beating the Yankees—so they can slay the Giants too, right? So why is Soxman cheering for San Fran? I've got those bases covered.

» Rangers owner Nolan Ryan: I'll never forgive him for his UFC-style pummeling of Robin Ventura after intentionally beaming him in 1993.
» The Rangers team colors closely resemble a certain North Side team.

» The Ex-Sox Factor: 2005 White Sox alumni Juan Uribe and Aaron "Don't Stop Believing" Rowand are Giants.
» A.J. Pierzynski: Had the Giants not released him in 2005, Soxgirl's crush might not have played for the Sox.

So who will be the big winner? How about Rangers catcher Bengie Molina? Also playing for the Giants in 2010, he's guaranteed a World Series ring. READ SOXMAN'S MUSINGS AT TWITTER.COM/THESOXMAN72.

» The Blackhawks practiced Tuesday with a new look. The top line was Jonathan Toews centering for Patrick Sharp and Jack Skille, with the second line of Marian Hossa and Troy Brouwer flanking Tomas Kopecky. Patrick Kane was dropped to the third line with winger Viktor Stalberg and center Dave Bolland.

» DeAngelo Hall announced Tuesday on Twitter that the No. 23 he wore in Sunday's 17-14 win over the Bears is on the way to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio. Hall tied an NFL record with four interceptions off Bears quarterback Jay Cutler, one for a 92-yard touchdown.

» The White Sox protected themselves Tuesday by picking up the 2011 options on left-handed reliever Matt Thornton and back-up catcher Ramon Castro. Thornton is the lone late-inning reliever under contract by the Sox. He'll make $3 million next year.

When to go: A long-in-advance reservation is a good idea at "Top Chef" Season 4 winner Stephanie Izard's super-hot West Loop small plates spot. If you don't have one:

Avoid the 6-9 p.m. window (the restaurant opens at 4:30 p.m.) and try to snag a first-come, first-served spot at the bar or lounge area.

What to wear: "I tell people to come comfortable," lead hostess Macy Kremzar says. "We are not fancy-schmancy."

What to order: Staff recommends two to three dishes per person. To fill up for less: Try one of the ever-changing, potentially unusual breads, which may feature something such as carrot oil or white anchovy butter ($4), chickpea fritters ($11) or smoked goat pizza ($16). Note: Menu changes daily.

When to go: After-work is a good bet to grab a table for prime people-watching at this special-occasion destination from the owners of neighboring gastro-pub the Gage. You'll feel like a regular "Mad Men" character thanks to luxe decor and a sophisticated cocktail menu.

What to wear: Henri draws post-work professionals early, then a chic date-night set later on. Blend in with your brightest business casual.

What to order: French-influenced cuisine includes glazed duck, veal chops and game meats, but among our server's suggestions was the reasonably priced short-rib burger ($16). Pair it with one of several local beer options or a gorgeous cocktail, including the Phillipe Collins ($11), a twist on the classic made with Bols Genever.

When to go: Show up between 10 p.m. and 1 a.m., when dinner offerings are scaled down to equally tasty small plates and diners concentrate on what's important at this classy, English-inspired pub: the beer.

What to wear: Casual date attire. Damask wallpaper, wood trim and quality eats ensure this food-focused spot isn't your usual corner bar.

What to order: If you're on a date, share a plate of house-made sausages and charcuterie ($19) while sipping one of 20 beers on draft. If you're flying solo, try the meat pie ($9) with pickles and chutney or hearty, house-made brick chicken wings ($8).

Mastro's Steakhouse

520 N. Dearborn St. 312-521-5100

When to go: Post-work on a weekday is a smart time to snack at this snazzy new River North steak and seafood spot. That way you can avoid tourist crowds from nearby hotels and stake out a table in the restaurant's lively lounge section, which features live music nightly.

What to wear: Your work attire, if you work in a business-casual or fancier office.

What to order: If you're not dead-set on ordering steak ($36-$51 for most cuts), share some of the menu's less pricey appetizers with friends. Bypass $29 crab cakes and consider the jumbo lump crab-stuffed mushrooms ($14), snow crab claws ($7 each) and oysters Rockefeller ($17). To drink, stick to the wine list's most affordable glasses ($9-$10) instead of specialty martinis ($17-$19).

RANDOM ACTS OF GREATNESS

5 THINGS WE'RE LOVING THIS WEEK

1 Mixing drinking with activism courtesy of the Agripolitan ($10) at Uncommon Ground (3800 N. Clark St.; 1401 W. Devon Ave.). The cocktail features different fruits depending on the season (right now it's apricot), and 50 cents from each benefits the Chicago Rarities Orchard Project, seeking to establish a community orchard in the city. Yes we can ... drink!
-GEOFF GEORGE

2 Homemade peanut butter cups ($3.50) at Kilwin's (1405 N. Wells St.), the Illinois-grown chocolate and ice cream shop that recently relocated from south suburban Orland Park to Wells Street in Old Town. -LISA ARNETT

3 The wickedly funny British comedy "Tamara Drewe" starring Gemma Arterton ("Prince of Persia: The Sands of Time") and directed by Stephen Frears ("The Queen"). If you saw "Hereafter" instead last week, it's time to correct that decision. -MATT PAIS

4 Smiths Night at Danny's Tavern (1951 W. Dickens Ave.). Every fourth Tuesday of the month, "there is a light that never goes out" at the Bucktown bar with plenty of tunes from the brooding Moz and his Manchester band. It's sure to take you back. -VICTORIA RODRIGUEZ

5 The Creeper, a limited edition doppelbock created by Three Floyds Brewing Co. for instrumental rockers Pelican in honor of the local band's tenth anniversary. The creamy, high-alcohol beer debuted Saturday at Bottom Lounge; get your own bottle at Three Floyds' Munster, Ind., brewpub (9750 Indiana Pkwy.) starting at the end of the week. -LISA BALDE

BAR-GUMENTS

SETTLING AGE-OLD, BAR-BASED DISAGREEMENTS ONE ARGUMENT AT A TIME

What is a bar-gument, you say? For as long as there have been watering holes, there have been disagreements. Some people prefer martinis with gin, some with vodka. Bar-guments is here to settle some longstanding bar conflicts once and for all.

This week: Is it OK to take your drink with you in the bathroom?

METROMIX FILE

YES

For starters: Don't put your drink on the floor, and don't put it anywhere near a splash zone. Obviously, That said: Of course you can hold the drink in one hand if you can handle your business with the other (in which case, feel free to drink while you multitask), or rest the drink on something (sink/top of urinal/etc.) so the rim isn't touching anything and is properly elevated out of harm's way. With the proper sanitary precautions you may even take better care of your drink in the bathroom than someone else would while they "watch it for you." Which you don't want to have to ask for in the first place. —MATT PAIS

NO

Men are disgusting enough in public when we're stone-cold sober. So give us a bucket of beer and a plate of chili-cheese fries, and what do you think happens when we get behind closed doors? Who knows what undiscovered strains of creepy-crawlies are wafting around restrooms just waiting to turn gin and tonics into petri dish cocktails? (Ladies, I doubt your restrooms are much better.) Call me a clean freak, but I'd sooner flush a half-finished drink than play a game of Russian roulette with E. coli. —MIKE HINES

"A Day Is Gonna Come"

'Softened Halloween'

Zombies are just metaphors and late October means going on hayrides for gypsy rockers Milano

At first glance, Jonathan Guerra, founder and frontman of gypsy-tinged rockers Milano, might appear to be a fan of Halloween macabre. This is not the case.

Despite titling the band's debut EP "Zombie World" and littering new song "A Day Is Gonna Come" with ominous lines such as "the living will be dead," Guerra claims to never have seen a horror film in its entirety. It's far more likely that the sextet's latest EP, "Gloria," being celebrated this weekend with an album release show at Subterranean, is divinely inspired. "I continue to probe deeper into these spiritual things," says the 25-year-old Edgewater resident, who studied historical theology at Moody Bible Institute. "I'm finding the story of redemption and hope resonates with my soul."

By phone, Guerra discussed his nomadic upbringing (he was born in California and raised in Texas before his family settled in the Chicago 'burbs), his first Halloween costume and why he enjoys dressing up for performances.

Your last EP was called "Zombie World." Are you a fan of zombie films?

I'm not. It comes back to wanting to perpetuate that idea that we can spend a lot of our time disconnected from the realities of life. That's where the zombie metaphor comes in.

So you're more from the George Romero school of thought? The zombies in his movies are always a metaphor for something else; in "Dawn of the Dead," the undead lumbering around the shopping mall also function as an attack on American consumerism.

Exactly! I'm all about that ultra heavy-handed metaphor. I am kind of a budding fanatic of that stuff just because it's so melodramatic.

Was Halloween a big deal in your family when you were growing up?

Not really. I always went to the softened Halloween events like Harvest Fest, where you rode on hay wagons and found candy in [piles of] cotton balls.

Have you ever dressed up for Halloween? When was the first time?

I never did the costume thing growing up. [The first time] must have been a couple years ago with my now-wife. We were Dwight Schrute and Angela from "The Office." [The band] might actually dress as zombies for this show, so it's not completely out of the bag.

Are you drawn to that theatrical element of dressing up for the stage?

Yeah. I guess fundamentally I believe performance is theater, whether you're performing music or doing a play. I think you need to adopt a theater of yourself if you're going to be up on display for people. There's really no other place where it's appropriate for you to prance around singing about something you believe in and not get thrown into an insane asylum.

What drew you to historical theology as a field of study?

I was in a band [Scarecrow Garden] that had a reasonable amount of success when I was 18, but I felt like all the songs were about nothing. I've always been interested in theology and spiritual things, so I thought it'd be the most interesting. In a lot of ways, that's loosely in the center of what I write about now. I want to perpetuate these stories of beauty and redemption and hope. It might sound a little bit dramatic, but I'm kind of a dramatic person.

New releases

The Autumn Defense

"Once Around"

Yep Roc

Now four albums and nearly a decade into their creative pairing, the Autumn Defense's John Stirratt and Pat Sansone, both moonlighting from their day jobs in local legend Wilco, still have a knack for turning out carefully orchestrated '60s pop. Despite a name that calls to mind crisp temperatures and leaves the color of still-burning embers, much of the duo's latest is the musical equivalent of a blossoming spring garden shaded with gorgeous sighs of violin and delicate acoustic picking.

Old-school romantics to their core, Stirratt and Sansone trade lines about penning handwritten love letters ("Tell Me What You Want") and winning carnival prizes for that special someone ("Huntington Fair"). But like Ang Lee's "The Ice Storm," there's something darker bubbling beneath the polished surface. "If we choose another way, we may be back someday ... alive," the pair sings on a placid "The Rift." That growing sense of unease colors much of the record, as the duo traverses broken towns and relationships before coming to terms with the years of love and loss on hard-won album closer "There Will Always Be a Way."

Janelle Monae: "ArchAndroid"

Song you've listened to on repeat recently?

None. "I don't listen to songs on repeat, which my wife hates."

Song you never want to hear again?

Any sing-talk song by Ke$ha

Best concert you've seen in the last year?

Jonsi at the Vic Theatre

New band you don't know personally that deserves to be big?

[Chicago trio] Dozens

Chicago's best music venue?

Subterranean. "I love the venues that respond to e-mails with some semblance of politeness. The House Call Entertainment folks are great, and they book Subterranean."

When you formed Milano, did you already have that gypsy-rock sound in your head?

There's this gypsy band from [Romania] called Taraf de Haïdouks I got into as [Milano] was starting up, and it's just stunning music. There's just something about the spirit of the gypsy or the nomad that resonates deeply with me.

Does that have anything to do with how often you moved around growing up?

I never considered that, but perhaps. It's probably an important piece of information that my parents are both immigrants (Guerra's father immigrated from Cuba and his mother from Argentina). We never really had extended family; we were moving around so much it was difficult to stay in touch. It was always just me, my mom and my dad. But this gypsy rock-slash-electronic kind of sound we've arrived at could just be due to my own musical bipolar-ness. I tend to be all over the place. ANDY DOWNING IS A METROMIX SPECIAL

Traveling Circus

Montreal nouveau cirque troupe 7 Fingers arrives in Chicago

By Julia Borcherts

Ever thought about running away and joining the circus? San Francisco native Bradley Henderson, 26, did just that. As kids, he and his siblings studied gymnastics and traditional Chinese circus arts such as hoop diving and pole climbing with master trainer Lu Yi, and at 18, he enrolled in Montreal's National Circus School. After graduating in 2005, he was hired by Montreal performance troupe 7 Fingers for the original cast of "Traces," a humorous and dramatic, urban-themed spectacle featuring music, film, narration, dance and gravity-defying acrobatic feats—kind of an edgier Cirque du Soleil in a setting similar to "Rent."

After extensive touring across Europe, the ensemble's first large-scale North American tour kicks off in Chicago this week with Henderson joined by six new cast members. We stopped by the new Broadway Playhouse during rehearsals to chat with him about the show and on-stage circus life.

How would you describe the show?

It's pretty action-packed. From the very beginning, as soon as the music comes on, it's really, really in your face—tumbling everywhere.

What makes it unique?

Usually when you do a circus show, you might have one number or discipline that you specialize in. Well, in this one, the seven artists are onstage the entire time and they have to be good at all the disciplines. It's nice because there's also live music onstage and a little bit of storytelling. We also have this cool way of playing with a basketball and skateboards—you wouldn't maybe think of skateboards in that way until you see this show.

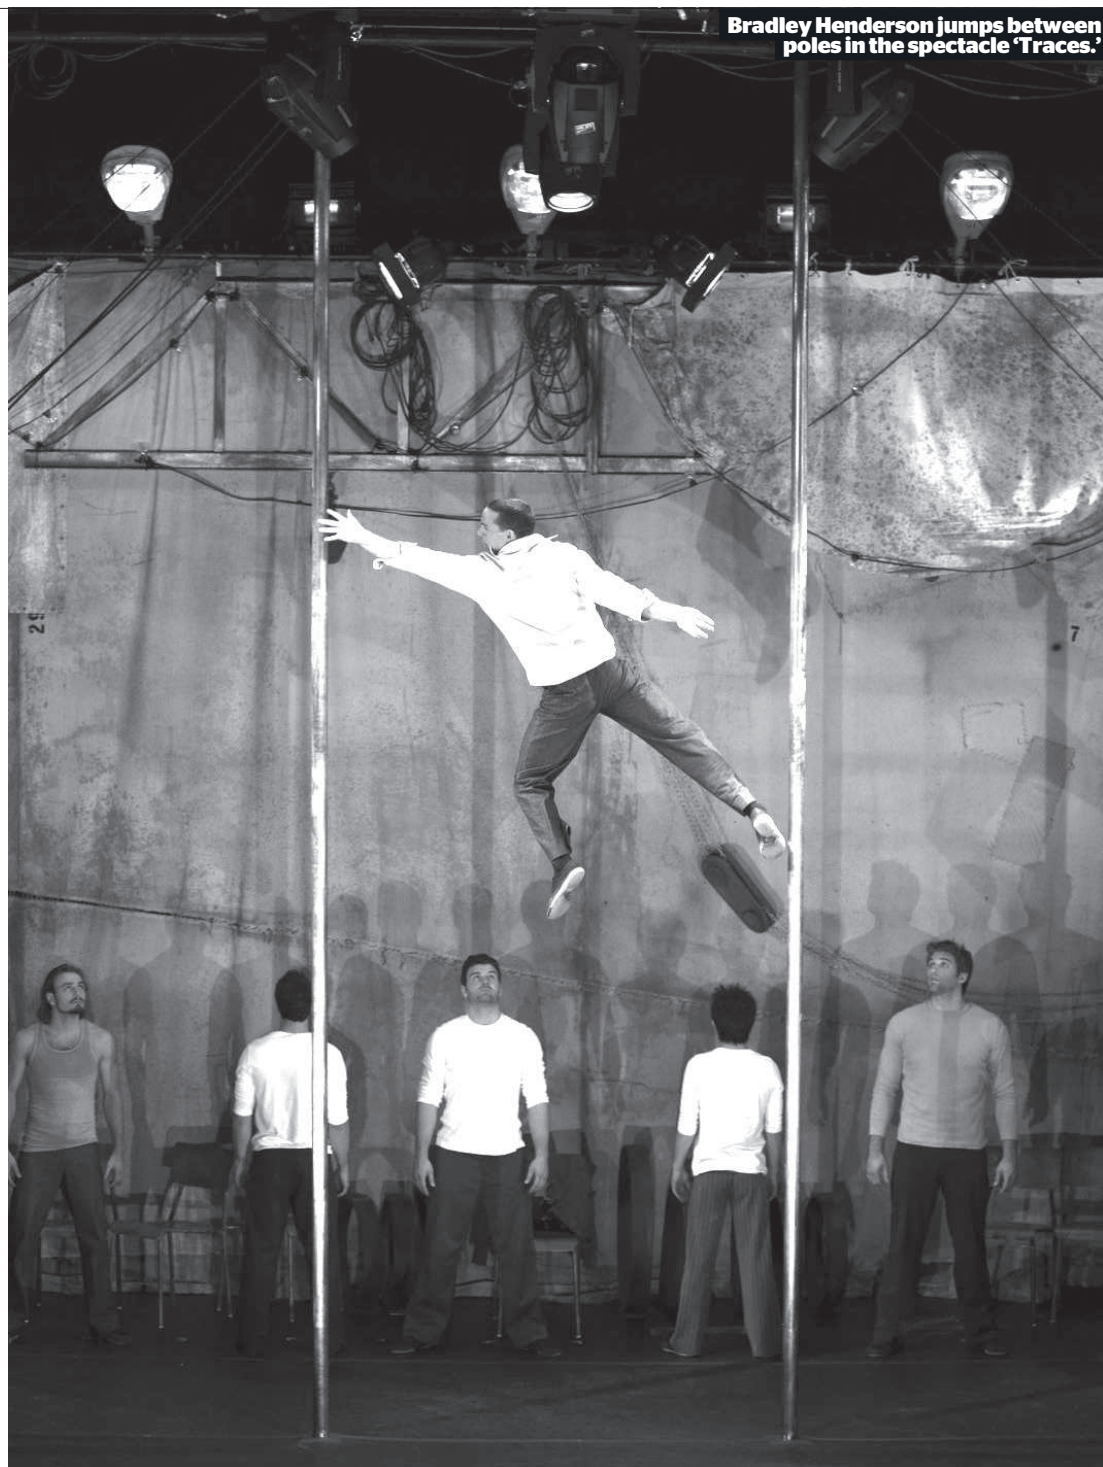

What's the story line?

Basically, we're in a bunker and we're not really sure how we got there but there's this feeling of some kind of catastrophe going on outside in the world. And we're trying to use all the things around us to show the audience a positive energy to fight off the catastrophe—just leaving our traces in a positive way on each other and the audience. There's a ticking kind of beat that's a reference to everybody in the audience, like, "You guys don't have that much time, either. You've got to really live the moment and leave your traces on everybody you can because everybody runs out of time eventually."

This is the first full-cast show at Broadway Playhouse. How do you like the venue?

This stage is actually perfect. We've done [the show] on really small stages and it's rough. And when a stage is too big, [the effect's] just not as powerful and you get tired a lot faster with all the extra running you do. [In a venue of this size], the audience can't really believe it when they see people fly and they're just that much more blown away.

What happens when tricks go wrong?

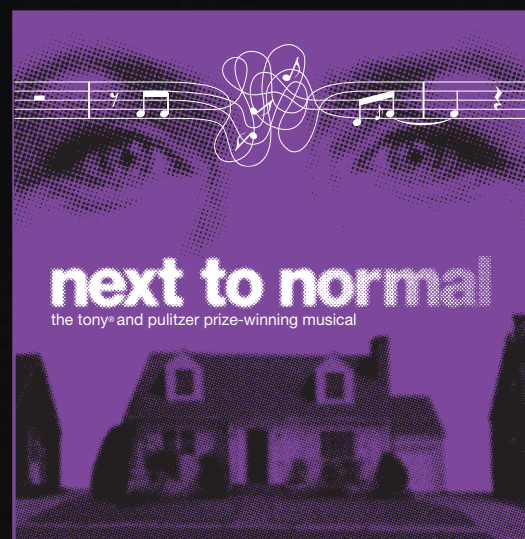

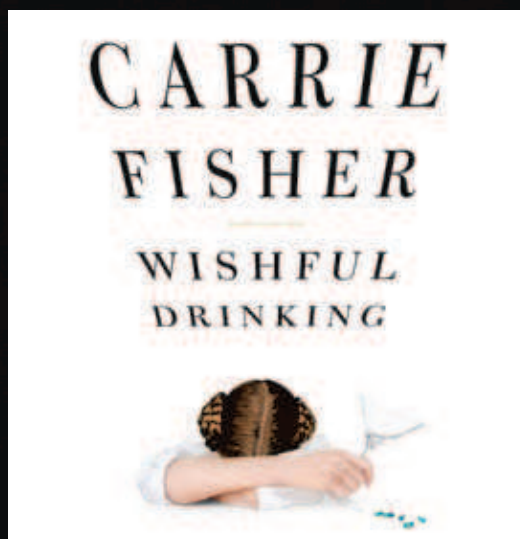

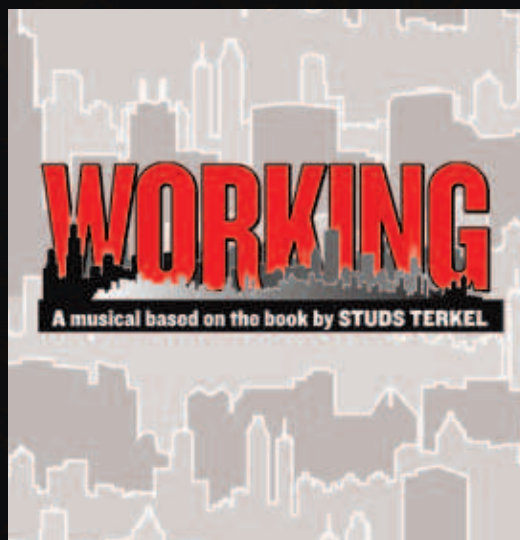

You have to think fast in the moment if something does go wrong or if there's a little injury—just making quick changes, talking with each other onstage to see what tricks we'll still go for. It's always a little bit nerve-wracking. Sometimes, we've had to—very rarely—just stop the whole thing.

What's been your scariest moment?

[We had an act with] a teeterboard. You get launched into the air and it gets darker as you get up there because you go up above the lights. And I opened up, ready to come down and land on my feet. But I opened up way too early, so I was just looking at the ceiling and I couldn't see the floor. And whenever you get lost in the air, it's so scary—you don't want to be not knowing where you are.

GETTY IMAGES FILE

SHAUN WHITE WHEELS INTO GAMER REALM

Flying Tomato takes to his skateboard for color-change video game

Reuters

Two-time Olympic gold medalist snowboarder Shaun White is turning away from the slopes and concentrating on skateboarding—in a new video game.

It is new video turf for White, the carrot-topped champion snowboarder who was dubbed “The Flying Tomato” early in his career and who is best known for his double McTwist on the half-pipe.

His past two snowboarding video games sold so well—4 million worldwide—that he was asked to make a new game in a genre dominated by skating legend Tony Hawk, whom White counts among his friends.

“We had the best selling snowboard game two years in a row so I had the opportunity to do a skateboard game,” White said.

The result is “Shaun White Skateboarding,” which publisher Ubisoft released Sunday. The PlayStation 3 version will be released Thursday due to a manufacturing glitch.

White, 24, is savvy to want to take another bite out of the sports video game market, a popular genre in the $60.4 billion global video game industry. Sports brands such as Madden NFL and FIFA can pull in major profits in an industry that dwarfs Hollywood’s box office take.

White’s video game is set in a gray world that livens up and transforms into a skate park only as players pull off and land tricks. While the game’s urban landscape might lack snow, it’s hardly out of White’s element. White, 24, splits his year competing in snowboarding and skateboarding. He was the first athlete to compete and win medals in both the winter and summer X Games, which are organized by ESPN, in two sports. When White returned this season to skateboarding after focusing on snowboarding for the Olympics, he was met with some doubters.

“When I came back to skating, everyone was like ‘Oh you’re the snowboard guy,’” he said.

With three wins in a row, including one three weeks ago at the Dew Tour Championships in Las Vegas, White said he has quieted his critics. Whether he was skateboarding in a motion capture suit at Ubisoft’s studio in Montreal, putting his own touch on the script or recording voiceovers in L.A., White insisted on being hands-on with the new game.

“I didn’t want to make a game unless I felt in the position to make something new and different.”

—Shaun White

He has been burned before by game companies, he said. When he was 13, he appeared as a character in a snowboarding game called “Cool Boarders” and was not thrilled with how it turned out.

His success on the slopes is evident with the gold “Super Bowl-style” rings he wears. The bigger one is from his gold medal win in Vancouver and a smaller gold one from Torino in 2006.

In November, White will switch back to snowboarding and in April he will hop back into professional skateboarding. He wants to compete in the next Winter Olympics in Sochi, Russia, in 2014. But the best half-pipe snowboarder in the world said he has to qualify first.

For now, White’s next contest will be on video game shelves, going head-to-head with “Tony Hawk’s Shred,” an Activision Blizzard game that uses a skateboard controller.

White said his new video game will not disappoint.

“I didn’t want to make a game unless I felt in the position to make something new and different,” he said. “I think fans can tell if you just slap a skateboarder on a game—you can’t fool kids.”

‘Shaun White Skateboarding’

XB360, PS3, Wii, PC

After a couple of years starring in snowboarding video games, the multitasking Shaun White has gotten off the slopes and onto the streets for “Shaun White Skateboarding.” The result is an interesting if somewhat flawed take on the skateboarding genre. While EA’s “Skate” franchise focuses on hard-core realism and “Tony Hawk: Shred” is an arcade-like ride on a skateboard peripheral, “Shaun White Skateboarding” features an odd story where you’re stuck in a world devoid of color and emotion because of an evil government that also has imprisoned White. Your job is to rescue The Flying Tomato and bring color and life back into the game world by skating around the environments and landing tricks, at which point color bursts from your board and spreads to everything around you. It’s a very creative idea that works at first, but ultimately grows tiresome.

FASHION Za Za Chevron knee socks

$18 at shopbop.com

While boots are a great part of fall and winter, the chafing that often accompanies them sure isn't fun. Do away with that pesky problem by throwing on a pair of knee-high socks. Marc by Marc Jacobs' latest pair offers fashionable function in a nerdy and quirky print.

'Friday Night Lights' 8 p.m. Wednesday, DirecTV 101

One of TV's best dramas begins its fifth and final season with Coach and Tami Taylor saying goodbye to Julie (Aimee Teegarden), who heads off to college along with Landry Clarke (Jesse Plemons). Coach meets a new prospect for the East Dillon Lions in Hastings Ruckle (Grey Damon). Star running back Luke Cafferty (Matt Lauria) will continue to deal with the fallout from Becky's abortion, and he'll face more challenges. "I think he grows up a lot," said Lauria, who is in Chicago filming Fox's "The Chicago Code." "I think he becomes a man." CURT WAGNER, REDEYE

TRACK-OFF

'The Shining'

By Verbal Kwest (above)

"The Shining" literally outshone the competition, Jura Shaheed, in this week's Kyles Files track-off, delivering a one-two punch of quality lyricism and a melancholic instrumental reminiscent of UGK or Scarface. Verbal Kwest captured an impressive 56 percent of the vote. Vote every Monday in the battle of local lyricists.

Wine tastes change with the season

bottle service

ALPANA SINGH
ritaredeye
@tribune.com

During these transitional weeks into the cooler fall season, I put away the vibrant whites and pink reds of summer in favor of richer and heartier wine selections that will pair well with the bounty of the fall harvest.

The perfect autumn white wine includes chardonnay or white Rhone blends. These wines are wonderful complements to seasonal fall produce such as butternut and acorn squash, sweet potatoes or comfort dishes such as pastas finished with a cream or brown butter and sage sauce.

The ideal red wines for fall feature more weight and structure on the palate and are richer and deeper in color. It's no coincidence that just as the temperature begins to drop, vegetables destined for braised dishes such as turnips, rutabagas and parsnips come into season.

For slow-cooked dishes such as coq au vin and short ribs, you need hearty red wines such as Spanish monastrell and Italian aglianico. Monastrell also is known as mourvedre in France, where it is a key blending grape used in Rhone wines. Monastrell thrives in the Jumilla region of Spain, where it produces a bold and rich wine that is relatively inexpensive. Aglianico is an ancient grape that grows in the Campania and Basilicata regions of Italy. It produces a hearty red wine that features flavors of black fruits with a slight smoky note. Both of these varietals can provide you with just as much warmth and comfort as your favorite sweater. THE average LIFE

What happens when famous people swap their jobs for regular gigs?

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Like Michael Bolton from "Office Space," anyone cursed with the same name as a celeb will be able to sympathize with CBS' in-development show "The Same Name," in which average Joes and famous people with identical names swap lives, New York Magazine reports. Aside from the inevitable bouts of shrieking if George Clooney were to show up as a high school teacher, here are a few life-swaps we'd like to see.

LADY GAGA
as a middle-school orchestra teacher

While our middle-school orchestra teachers were nuts enough to actually be named Lady Gaga, we're sure the former Stefani Germanotta could swap jobs with a suburban violinist with a dream for a day. That's about how long the kids would last.

JENNIFER LOPEZ
as a hairdresser

Some of JLo's mile-high hairdos lead us to believe she'd be a smashing success at this life swap. And maybe she learned the art of hair salon gossip back when she was just Jenny from the block.

NEIL PATRICK HARRIS as a mailman

We're so used to seeing him in Barney Stinson's suit uniform that postal customers probably wouldn't even recognize NPH as their letter carrier. Is this what's known as suiting down?

RUSSELL BRAND as a dentist

We're not saying we'd want to be in the chair—just that this would just be funny to watch. Also on the list of wacky people you wouldn't want inside your mouth with sharp instruments: Carrot Top, Mel Gibson and Miss Cleo.

BEYONCE as a divorce attorney

Will she be held in contempt of court for singing "Single Ladies"? Probably. But her Sasha Fierce attitude will be enough to win over any judge.

You know the late Wilt Chamberlain's claim that he slept with more than 20,000 women? Hugh Hefner (right) isn't buying it. "The number was [bleep]," Hefner, 84, told Metromix's Matt Pais by phone Tuesday before coming to Chicago to promote the documentary "Hugh Hefner: Playboy, Activist and Rebel," opening Friday at the Gene Siskel Film Center. "I just did the math." Hefner's own number? "I stopped counting a long time ago. I think that quality matters more than quantity." LOS ANGELES TIMES FILE PHOTO

Who's the man?

Is 2010 the year of Kanye West? According to askmen.com readers, the outspoken rapper is more influential than even President Obama. In the Top 49 Most Influential Men survey from the website, West placed fifth and Obama was 21st. Jon Stewart took the top spot, followed by Bill Gates, Mark Zuckerberg and Steve Jobs.

Love transformed

Looks like the Shia LaBeouf-Carey Mulligan (left) romance is over. People magazine reports the "Transformers" star and girlfriend Mulligan ended things

"some time ago." Their relationship first made the pop culture radar in summer 2009 after they were seen kissing at a restaurant in New York City. 20TH CENTURY FOX PHOTO

O 'Glee'-ful night

Yes, Virginia, there will be a "Glee" Christmas album, to be released Nov. 16, just ahead of the Fox comedy's Dec. 7 "Yuletide" episode, ew.com reports. Tracks include star Lea Michele singing "O Holy Night." But will it be as good as the "Rocky Horror Glee Show" record? Yeah, probably.

Jerry Springer (right) celebrates his 20th season on the air Wednesday with a show taped in Times Square, according to The Associated Press. Kim Kardashian, Perez Hilton, Kathy Griffin and Rachael Ray are among the celebs expected to appear on the anniversary episode of "The Jerry Springer Show," the Cincinnati Enquirer reports.

All-star anthem

Chi-town, stand up. Jennifer Hudson, Common, Lupe Fiasco and super-producer No I.D. have teamed up for "We Can Do it Now," a bluesy Windy City anthem and theme song for "Replay," a Fox Sports show that pits high school sports rivals against each other as adults. The Nov. 7 episode features a rematch between two Chicago basketball teams, the Brother Rice Crusaders and the Bloom Township Trojans, who played a controversial playoff game in 2000.
